Personally, I think this will be a good idea as some of the built in features on Android have to be forced into being great. Another unique idea from deMusica.com is the inclusion of content search for every single movie ever made. This is the first time I've seen this done on an Android device and I can see this becoming a huge asset to a movie collector. deMusica.com is also featuring a free monthly ad-supported membership which is something I'm surprised they aren't asking for more money for. The free membership is available right now in the Google Play store and in the future will be available for $3.99 per month. There is a free three-day trial in the Google Play store so if you're in the market for a movie streaming service on Android, check out the deMusica.com app. Want to read more? A: As suggested by @stewie, try to add -v /dev/shm:/dev/shm to the docker run command. The reason for this is that, while you see PostgreSQL (or whatever else you run) using your RAM, it might not have enough swap space to map a huge amount of swap space into RAM.
